"Everything is sales — because everything is a conversation."

THIS IS NOT A WORKBOOK

Most people will use this like a notebook. They'll write a few things down. Skip a few days. Come back when it's convenient. And nothing will change.

Because this isn't about writing things down. It's about training a skill.

Most people don't lose conversations because they don't know what to say. They lose them because they can't execute in real time.

They talk when they should ask. They react when they should lead. They fill silence when they should hold it. They cave when they should hold their position. They explain when they should question.

And by the time they realize it... the moment is gone. The boss moved on. The teenager walked off. The spouse shut down. The friend stopped trusting. The opportunity passed.

That's not a knowledge problem. That's a training problem.

For the next 90 days, this is your training ground — and your training ground is your real life. Every meeting. Every dinner table. Every difficult conversation. Every "we need to talk." Every negotiation you didn't realize was a negotiation.

You don't rise to the moment. You fall back on how you've trained.

The only question is: will you train... or just take notes?

THE GAP

If you've ever thought, "I knew what to say but didn't say it," that is the gap.

The gap between knowing and doing. Between understanding and executing. Between the version of you that replays the conversation later — and the version of you who actually leads it in real time.

That gap doesn't close through reading. Not through understanding. Not through nodding along to a podcast.

It closes through reps.

So where are you actually getting those reps right now?

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

Read. Drill. Apply. Review. Repeat.

This is a system, not a notebook. You don't flip through it. You run it.

1. Read Everything Is Sales completely. Not part of it — all of it.
2. As you read, capture the drill from each chapter. Don't try to master anything yet. Just understand what each drill is training.
3. Once you finish the book, the real work starts. For the next 90 days, you will apply one skill at a time in real conversations — at work, at home, with your kids, your partner, your friends, your boss, the stranger at the counter.
4. Not ten changes. One.
5. Every conversation becomes a rep. Every rep builds awareness. Every adjustment builds control.
6. After each conversation, review what happened. Not to judge it — but to train it.

Because in a real conversation, there's no time to think. Only how you respond. This guide exists to train that response until it becomes automatic.

IMPORTANT

You will see improvement doing this on your own. But there is a limit.

You can't see every mistake you're making in real time. You can't hear every subtle shift in your tone. You can't catch every moment you defaulted, caved, or filled the silence.

That is why this system was designed to pair with live training. Reps with feedback are what actually build the skill.

How much faster would you improve if someone corrected you in real time?

90-DAY COMMITMENT

Before you go any further, stop. Think about the last 30 days of your life — not your work.

— How many conversations did you walk away from thinking, "I should have said something different"?

— How many times did you cave on something that mattered just to end the tension?

— How many moments did you let someone talk over you, dismiss you, or steamroll you?

— How many times did you over-explain, justify, or soften your position before anyone even pushed back?

— How many opportunities — at work, at home, in your relationships — slipped because you talked too much, missed the moment, or didn't ask the right question?

That's the gap. And it doesn't fix itself.

Because in the moment, there's no time to think. Only how you respond. This only changes if you train it. Not once. Not when it's convenient. Daily.

For the next 90 days, this is your training ground. Every conversation is a rep. Every mistake is feedback. Every adjustment is progress.

COMMITMENT

■ I will use this system daily for the next 90 days.

■ I will track real conversations in my real life — not hypothetical ones.

■ I will focus on improving one thing every conversation.

PART ONE

CHAPTER TRAINING

Read the book. Capture the drill. Use it once before moving on.

CHAPTER 1 — THE INVISIBLE GAME OF INFLUENCE

Every conversation you walk into is already a negotiation — even when nobody calls it that. Asking your kid to put the phone down. Pitching your boss. Setting a boundary. Resolving a conflict.

There is always influence, always movement, always an outcome forming. You are either guiding the conversation or being guided by it. Once you see that, you stop hoping it goes your way and start noticing where you can lead it.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Think about your last three meaningful conversations (work, home, anywhere). Label each one as a Win, Draw, or Loss. Then write whether you showed up as the Leader or the Reactor.

Conversation 1 — Win / Draw / Loss:

Leader or Reactor?

---

Conversation 2 — Win / Draw / Loss:

---

Leader or Reactor?

---

Conversation 3 — Win / Draw / Loss:

---

Leader or Reactor?

---

What pattern do I notice about how I show up?

---

ASK YOURSELF

You understand this. But can you execute it when the pressure is on — when your spouse is upset, your boss puts you on the spot, your kid pushes back? Where are you practicing this under real conditions?

CHAPTER 2 — MENTAL POSITIONING: WINNING BEFORE THE FIRST WORD

Most people lose conversations before they ever open their mouth. They walk in reactive, unsure, already bracing.

People don't defer to the smartest person in the room. They defer to the most grounded. Grounded doesn't mean aggressive. It means settled, clear, and already oriented to lead. Position is everything. The other person feels it before you say a word.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Before your next high-stakes conversation, write down the internal position you're walking in with. Not what you'll say — where you stand.

The conversation I'm walking into:

---

Position I usually default to (chasing, hoping, defending, surviving):

---

Position I'm choosing instead (settled, leading, curious, grounded):

---

What changed in how the other person responded?

---

ASK YOURSELF

If you tried this tomorrow and it didn't land — who would tell you what went wrong? Who's giving you real-time feedback so you don't keep repeating the same pattern?

CHAPTER 3 — THE EMOTIONAL VOLUME DIAL

Your tone controls the conversation more than your words. Most people speed up, get louder, or get defensive when pressure shows up. The person who stays steady becomes the emotional anchor of the room.

When your energy is grounded, the other person has something to match. That is leadership without force — how you de-escalate a fight with your partner, calm a frustrated coworker, or hold steady when your kid is melting down.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Before one conversation today, choose an intent word: calm, grounded, curious, present. Carry that word in. Lower your pace and tone by 50%. Watch what happens.

My intent word:

---

Where did I feel pressure to speed up, defend, or explain?

---

What happened when I stayed steady?

---

Did they match my energy? What did I notice?

---

ASK YOURSELF

Knowing this and doing this are two different things. Reading builds awareness. Reps build skill. Where are you getting those reps — and who is holding you accountable?

CHAPTER 4 — THE POWER OF LISTENING: GATHERING LEVERAGE

The person speaking the most has the least control.

Listening is not passive. It is how you gather leverage. When people feel heard, they reveal more. What they reveal tells you where the conversation actually needs to go. Most people listen just long enough to respond. You're training to listen for what actually matters — the real concern under the complaint, the real fear under the resistance.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

After your next meaningful conversation, write down three things the other person said that actually mattered. Not what you wanted to hear — what gave you leverage.

Thing that mattered 1:

---

Thing that mattered 2:

---

Thing that mattered 3:

---

---

What did those answers reveal that I would have missed if I'd been talking?

---

ASK YOURSELF

You've felt the moment slip before. You knew what to do but couldn't pull it off in real time. That gap doesn't close with more reading. It closes with practice under pressure. Where is that happening for you?

CHAPTER 5 — QUESTIONS AS A STEERING WHEEL

Statements create resistance. Questions create movement.

When you tell someone something, they can debate it. When you ask the right question, they answer — and in answering, they move themselves forward. This works with your boss, your spouse, your kids, the contractor giving you the runaround, the family member you've been arguing with for years. Control doesn't come from convincing. It comes from guiding attention.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Take three statements you normally make in your daily life and rewrite each one as a question.

Statement 1 (e.g., "You never listen to me"):

Question version 1:

---

Statement 2:

---

Question version 2:

---

Statement 3:

---

Question version 3:

---

Which one am I going to use first, and where?

---

ASK YOURSELF

How many times have you understood a concept but still defaulted to old habits when it mattered? That pattern only breaks with structured repetition and live correction. Are you getting that anywhere right now?

CHAPTER 6 — PRECISION QUESTIONS: REVEALING WHAT ACTUALLY MATTERS

Most people ask surface-level questions, so they get surface-level answers. "How was your day?" "Fine." Precision questions reveal motive. They move someone from abstract thinking into a clear picture of what they actually want — or what's actually wrong.

This is how you find out what your partner is really upset about. What your kid is really avoiding. What your boss really values.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

In a real conversation, ask: "If this went perfectly, what would it look like?" Then: "What would that mean for you?" Write down what they reveal.

The conversation:

---

What "perfect" looked like to them:

---

What that outcome means to them personally:

---

---

What did I learn that I never would have known by guessing or assuming?

---

ASK YOURSELF

If someone recorded your last five important conversations and played them back — would you be proud of how you showed up? If not, what's your plan to change that?

CHAPTER 7 — THE SCIENCE OF SILENCE

Silence is where the truth shows up.

When you ask a strong question and stay quiet, the other person works to fill the gap. What comes out is often less polished and more honest than anything they would have said if you'd kept talking. The person who can sit in the gap longest holds the control.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Ask one strong question today, then say nothing. Hold the gap. Let the other person fill it before you speak.

Question I asked:

Roughly how long did I hold the silence?

---

What did they say after the silence?

---

What truth came out because I waited instead of filling the gap?

---

ASK YOURSELF

Athletes don't get better by watching film alone. They get better by drilling under pressure with a coach watching. Your conversations are no different. Where is your training environment?

CHAPTER 8 — CONVERSATION ALCHEMY: TURNING RESISTANCE INTO CURIOSITY

Resistance is not rejection. It is information.

When your partner pushes back, your kid argues, your coworker shuts down — that's not the end of the conversation. That's the start of the real one. Most people try to push through resistance, which only creates more of it. Conversation Alchemy is the skill of turning friction into curiosity. You don't defend. You explore.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Take one piece of pushback you hear often. Instead of defending, ask: "What's behind that for you?" Then listen for the real issue underneath.

The pushback I usually hear:

---

Question I used instead of defending:

---

What was actually behind their concern?

---

---

Did the resistance drop? What changed in the room?

---

ASK YOURSELF

You can practice this alone and improve. But you'll miss things you can't see. The subtle shifts. The timing mistakes. The moments you didn't even know you lost. Who is catching those for you?

CHAPTER 9 — DISCOVERY MASTERY: CONTROL THROUGH CURIOSITY

Most people stop too early. They get the first answer and move on. But the real conversation is usually underneath the first answer.

"I'm fine" is never the whole story. Neither is "It's not a big deal" or "Whatever you want." Discovery Mastery is staying curious long enough to uncover what actually matters. One more question. Then one more.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

In your next conversation, ask three follow-up questions before responding, explaining, or offering an opinion.

Initial answer they gave:

---

Follow-up question 1:

---

Follow-up question 2:

---

Follow-up question 3:

---

What did I uncover by staying curious that I would have missed otherwise?

---

ASK YOURSELF

If this skill could change your relationships, your career, and your confidence — why would you try to build it without feedback? What would change if someone corrected you in real time?

CHAPTER 10 — THE IDEAL OUTCOME VISUALIZATION

People do not decide based on logic alone. They decide based on what they can see and feel.

When you help someone define their ideal outcome, you make the decision concrete. They stop talking about a vague problem and start describing the future they want. That picture becomes the frame for the rest of the conversation.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Ask: "What would the perfect outcome look like for you?" Then: "What would that mean for you?"
Capture the exact words they use.

Their ideal outcome:

---

What that outcome means to them:

---

The exact phrase I should remember and use later:

---

ASK YOURSELF

Are you consuming this material or actually training it? There's a massive difference between understanding a concept and being able to deploy it when someone pushes back on you.

CHAPTER 11 — APPROVAL FRAMES: WHO ELSE IS REALLY IN THE ROOM

Most decisions are not made alone. If you don't understand who else is involved, you don't control the outcome.

Your spouse has a friend whose opinion matters. Your boss has a boss. Your kid has peers whose voices are louder than yours. Hidden decision-makers create hidden resistance.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

In a conversation where a decision is on the table, ask: "Who else is involved in this with you?" Then follow the answer instead of assuming.

The decision:

Who else has influence?

---

What's their stake or concern?

---

What needs to happen with them before a real decision can be made?

---

ASK YOURSELF

You don't get better at conversations by thinking about conversations. You get better by having them — with structure, feedback, and someone who can see what you can't. Where is that happening?

CHAPTER 12 — POSITIONING WITHOUT COMPARING

People are always comparing — even when they don't say it. Comparing you to their ex. Comparing your idea to the last one that failed. Comparing this moment to a memory you don't even know about.

If you don't know what they're comparing you to, you're guessing. Positioning without comparing means you don't attack the alternative — you ask the question that reveals the frame they're using.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

When you sense an unspoken comparison, ask: "What are you comparing this to?" Then listen for what they value, fear, or misunderstand.

The conversation:

---

---

What they're comparing this to:

---

---

What that comparison reveals about what they actually want:

---

---

How should I position myself or my message based on what they said?

---

ASK YOURSELF

How much faster would you improve if every week someone showed you exactly where you lost control, missed the moment, or talked when you should have asked? That environment exists.

CHAPTER 13 — MICRO-YES MAPPING: BUILDING MOMENTUM

Big decisions come from small agreements.

When someone says yes to a sequence of clear, low-pressure questions, momentum builds. By the time you get to the bigger ask, it feels like a continuation, not a confrontation.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Before your next real ask, line up three to five easy agreement questions to ask first.

Micro-yes question 1:

---

Micro-yes question 2:

---

Micro-yes question 3:

---

The bigger ask I'm building toward:

---

---

Did momentum increase? What did I notice in their tone, posture, or response?

---

ASK YOURSELF

You're building awareness right now. That's good. But awareness without correction just means you'll notice your mistakes more clearly — without fixing them. What's your plan for the correction part?

CHAPTER 14 — THE THERMOSTAT EFFECT: SETTING THE EMOTIONAL CLIMATE

You are the emotional thermostat of every conversation you walk into.

People borrow cues from the person who feels most grounded. If you are calm, they calm down. If you are reactive, they react. Setting the emotional climate is not manipulation. It's leadership. And it starts with your own state — before you walk in the door.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

Before your next high-stakes conversation, choose the emotional climate you want to set. Then hold that tone even if the other person shifts theirs.

The emotional climate I chose:

---

Where was I tested?

---

Did they eventually match my tone? What changed in the room?

---

ASK YOURSELF

The people who master this skill fastest aren't the ones who read the most. They're the ones who practice the most — with someone watching. Is anyone watching your reps right now?

CHAPTER 15 — THE CONVODOJO: DAILY HABITS FOR MASTERY

Skill does not come from understanding. It comes from repetition.

This is where everything compounds: one drill, one conversation, one adjustment at a time. The workbook gives you the structure. Live training gives you pressure, practice, and feedback. You don't rise to the moment. You fall back on how you've trained.

USE THIS BEFORE YOU MOVE ON

Don't read the next chapter and call that progress. Use this in your next real conversation first.

FIELD DRILL

For one full day, treat every conversation as training. After each one, write the pattern you noticed and the adjustment you'd make next time.

Most common pattern I noticed today (filling silence, defending, over-explaining, caving):

Where did I default under pressure?

---

The drill I need most right now:

---

ASK YOURSELF

This drill works. But it works ten times faster when someone is there to catch what you missed, challenge your assumptions, and push you past comfortable. Where are you getting that level of training?

PART TWO

THE 90-DAY DRILL SYSTEM

Four drills. Real conversations. One adjustment at a time.

THE 90-DAY FIELD MANUAL

You've read the book. You've captured the drills. Now the actual training begins.

For the next 90 days, you will rotate through four core drills — one per week — and apply them to the real conversations already happening in your life. You already have plenty. You just have to start treating them like reps.

THE FOUR CORE DRILLS

DRILL 1 — THE QUESTION DRILL

Replace one statement with a question in every meaningful conversation today. Track how the conversation shifted because you asked instead of told.

DRILL 2 — THE SILENCE DRILL

Ask one strong question, then hold the silence for at least 5 seconds before saying another word. Track what came out of the gap.

DRILL 3 — THE LISTENING DRILL

After each meaningful conversation, write down 3 things the other person said that actually mattered. Not what you wanted to hear — what gave you leverage.

DRILL 4 — THE THERMOSTAT DRILL

Choose your emotional climate before you walk into a conversation. Hold it no matter what the other person does. Track whether they matched you.

THE WEEKLY CYCLE

| Week | Drill Focus             | Daily Reps           | Weekly Review |
|------|-------------------------|----------------------|---------------|
| 1    | Question Drill          | Min. 3 conversations | After Day 7   |
| 2    | Silence Drill           | Min. 3 conversations | After Day 14  |
| 3    | Listening Drill         | Min. 3 conversations | After Day 21  |
| 4    | Thermostat Drill        | Min. 3 conversations | After Day 28  |
| 5–12 | Rotate. Stack. Combine. | Min. 3 conversations | Every 7 days  |

After Week 4, you start stacking — using two drills at once. By Week 8, three. By Week 12, all four are running on autopilot.

WEEK 12 REVIEW

Days 78–84

Week of: _____

1. What drill did I focus on this week?

---

---

---

2. What's the #1 pattern I noticed in myself?

---

---

---

3. Where did I lead a conversation I would have lost before?

---

---

---

4. Where did I still default to my old habits?

---

---

---

5. What's the one adjustment I'm carrying into next week?

DAY 90 CHECK-IN

What kind of conversations do I now lead that I used to survive?

---

---

---

---

---

What's the next level of training I need to get to?

---

---

---

---

---

Am I doing this alone, or am I ready for live correction and pressure?

---

---

---

---

---

THE FINAL WORD

You started this 90 days ago to close the gap between what you know and what you actually do under pressure.

You've trained your questions. You've trained your silence. You've trained your listening. You've trained your thermostat.

You've stopped reacting to the conversations of your life and started leading them.

But here's the truth: you've gone as far as solo reps will take you.

The next level — the level where this becomes instinct, where you handle pressure you haven't even seen yet, where you walk into any room and know you can lead it — that level only opens up with live correction, real pressure, and someone who can see what you can't.

That's what the ConvoDojo is built for.

You don't rise to the moment. You fall back on how you've trained.

The only question left is: how far are you willing to take this?

"Everything is sales — because everything is a conversation."
